modification of cytoplasmic histone mRNA in a rat teratocarcinoma cell line. The production and modification of cytoplasmic histone mRNA in the F9 rat teratocarcinoma cell line has been examined. The steady-state levels of cytoplasmic histone mRNA are moderately elevated in early F9 cultures, and this enhancement is reflected in an increase in the rate of transcription of this mRNA.

The distribution of radioactivity between the poly(A)-containing histone mRNA and the poly(A)-free histone mRNA suggests that the bulk of the histone mRNA of early-passage F9 cells consists of poly(A)-free molecules. Uptake of 18-S RNA into polysomes was not detected in early-passage F9 cells, but was observed in late-passage and in in vitro-transformed cells. A portion of the exogenous 18-S RNA which is present in polysomes of late-passage F9 cells is labeled when the cells are labeled with [3H]uridine, suggesting that it is a transcribed 18-S RNA. These observations, in addition to others, suggest that the histone gene transcription machinery is assembled into its functional state in late-passage F9 cells.

and to the particular field of methods and apparatus for cooking. B. Discussion of the Related Art Those familiar with the prior art know that a variety of methods and apparatus have been used for cooking. For example, it is known to place food products in the ovens of a stove top for a period of time. This method is time consuming because one must take the oven out of the stove top and place the food products inside the oven

The code I am using is: > dupe a1 d d[duplicated(d$ID),] I am using d$ID because I do not know how to get a to remove the rows with duplicated ID. What is the error in my methodology? A: Probably I misunderstood your question, but I think it is not necessary to use lapply for this purpose. You can accomplish this by keeping only rows without duplicated ID values (empty elements in the vector). df[duplicated(df$ID),
